National Sports Law Institute Year in Review*

by Paul M. Anderson, Editor & NSLI Associate Director

During the past six months the NSLI and the Sports Law Program at Marquette University Law School have continued to provide diverse educational opportunities for Marquette law students as well as current and future leaders in the sports industry. In addition, through various publications and events, the NSLI has continued to provide a national forum for the thoughtful consideration and discussion of American and international sports law and business issues. An overview of these activities and publications follows.

LL.M. IN SPORTS LAW

In August 2007 Marquette University Law School will begin offering the first and only Master of Laws (LL.M.) in Sports Law degree in the United States. This unique graduate degree in Sports Law will provide lawyers trained at foreign law schools with both a theoretical and practical education concerning legal regulation of the United States amateur and professional sports industries as well as Olympic and international sports.

Marquette University Law School's Sports Law Program attracts J.D. students from throughout the country. The new LL.M. program makes Marquette's Sports Law curriculum available to lawyers who have earned a law degree from an accredited foreign law school. It will enable foreign lawyers to earn a specialized post-graduate degree in sports law that also develops knowledge and skills with general application outside the sports industry. In particular, an individual who earns the LL.M. in Sports Law degree will be able to:

1. Understand how amateur, professional, and Olympic sports are regulated by the United States legal system, which will enhance one's ability to make comparisons with the legal regulation of sports in his/her home country.

* Editor's Note: This year in review covers the past six months in order to catch up with the partial year in review for 2006 published in Volume 17, Numbers 1&2 (combined issue).

2. Understand the key historical, sociological, economic, and public policy issues influencing the development of American sports law.
3. Understand the different internal processes for regulating amateur, professional, and Olympic sports within the United States.
4. Understand how various areas of American public law, particularly antitrust and labor law, shape and constrain the internal regulatory authority of private sports leagues and organizations.
5. Be able to use this knowledge effectively in matters involving American sports organizations, leagues, and athletes.
6. Understand the international legal environment applicable to sport.
7. Identify and understand policy issues affecting the legal regulation of sport and resolve legal problems from both a theoretical and practical perspective.

To earn the LL.M. in Sports Law degree, students must successfully complete a minimum of 22 credit hours during a nine-month period of academic residence at Marquette University Law School, in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, U.S.A. Required courses include Professional Sports Law, Amateur Sports Law, two sports law electives, and an LL.M. Directed Research Project on an international or comparative sports law issue/topic. Students must also take two general electives from the Law School's civil litigation and dispute resolution, business and commercial law, employment law, or intellectual property law course streams.

Admission to the LL.M. program in Sports Law is selective and will be based primarily on previous performance in legal studies, although professional accomplishments, publications, and other factors will be given significant weight. No rigid requirements for grades or class rankings will be used, but the Admissions Committee expects that successful candidates will have strong academic records and substantial professional and/or scholarly achievements, especially in the area of Sports Law and related fields.

Further information on the LL.M. in Sports Law program can be found on the NSLI's website at LL.M. website: <http://law.marquette.edu/jw/llm>.
