Eugene Volokh

Professor Volokh is an especially prominent commentator on the law and public policy, reaching both popular and academic audiences. He established the widely read Volokh Conspiracy blog (www.volokh.com), and his extensive scholarly work has appeared in the Yale Law Journal, Harvard and Stanford law reviews, and Supreme Court Review, among many other places. You may have also read his articles in such newspapers as The Wall Street Journal, The New York Times, and The Washington Post. He served as a law clerk to Justice Sandra Day O'Connor at the United States Supreme Court and Judge Alex Kozinski at the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. Professor Volokh serves as the Gary T. Schwartz Professor of Law at UCLA Law School, where he teaches free speech law, criminal law, copyright law, the law of government and religion, and a seminar on firearms regulation policy.

Slippery slope arguments—we've all made some, and we've all pooh-poohed others. Liberals, conservatives, and libertarians all make them, though in different fields, whether free speech, privacy, euthanasia, gun control, various hot-button social issues, or many others.

Do these arguments make sense, and, if so, when? How can we evaluate them better, and make them more effectively?

Professor Volokh, who has published on the topic in the Harvard Law Review, will discuss these questions, and more.
