Carol A. Cieri

1953-2019

Bright and early on New Year's Day 2019, Carol desLauriers Cieri, our beloved wife and mother, left this earth for a better place. As she always had, she chose her own path (not the easy one), and stuck to it. She was born on an Air Force base in Japan, which led to an ongoing joke that she could still one day become president, since technically the base was U.S. soil (fortunately for us, she didn't pursue that path). She graduated with honors from Notre Dame University. Next was law school, where she graduated from Marquette University, again with honors. After working briefly in the field of law, she moved to Boston, where she worked for several years as a writer and editor for the Christian Science Monitor. Finally, she came to Camden in the early '90s, again to work in the newspaper business. It was there that she met Paul McGurren (on a fly-fishing trip); they were married soon after and would spend the next 25 years together. They bought a big old farm house in Lincolnton, where they raised two amazing daughters, Emma and Clara, who would become Carol's pride and joy. She was a stay-at-home mom, who saw to it that, as little ones, the girls got to know the real, natural world of trees, flowers, fields, insects, birds and animals. Technology would come later. Somehow, while caring for our girls, keeping the household going and keeping us fed, she found time to run a home-based editing business that was a big chunk of the family income. Among other things, she was an accomplished fly fisher, storyteller, home gardener, book author and baker of the most amazing scones and pies that a person could ever hope to enjoy. The final seven or so years of her career were spent as director of Coastal Family Hospice Volunteers.

She went on to Manhattanville College in Westchester, New York where she majored in Russian. A Masters Degree in journalism, and a law degree from Marquette followed. While studying at Marquette, Jacqueline served as editor-in-chief of the law review. A short career as a lifestyle reporter for the Omaha World-Herald and other publications was followed by nearly 30 years of practicing law. William W. Graper

Bill was the American Dream. Self-made, he came from a small town (Pella, WI). He put himself through college, earning three degrees and then working two jobs to save enough to buy his first rental property. He and his wife, Mary, built a successful real estate business and law practice. Bill had the kindest soul that was often hidden under a tough exterior. But you could easily see the kindness in his actions. He was the ultimate provider for his family and others. He was very generous, often quietly, helping those who knew him and those who barely knew him. He had a quick wit, a sarcastic sense of humor, and at most times was gruff. But he had a goofy and endearing personality that couldn't be ignored, and made people want to be around him. Bill's family and his dogs were his entire world. He never missed a moment that was important in the life of his three children and eight grandchildren, and they knew that he was always there for them. He led by example; and exuded the values of integrity, honesty, generosity, determination, humor, and love of one's family and country. To his family, and to many others, he was their rock and their hero. He was deeply loved, admired, and will be missed terribly.
