A Distinguished Career, Definitely Not in Politics

Grant Langley shrugs off questions about his political views. He doesn’t discuss that with people; he doesn’t get involved in politics.

In fact, that’s central to how he came to be the city attorney of Milwaukee. Except for a brief stint in private practice, Langley went straight from Marquette Law School in 1970 to a position as an assistant Milwaukee city attorney in 1971. Real estate, labor negotiations, zoning, claims against the city—the range of legal work for a municipality, especially one the size of Milwaukee, is wide, and Langley says he got great legal experience in the following years.

But, after a dozen years, he had had enough of one thing in the city attorney’s office: politics. “I found the office to be highly politicized,” he said. The then-city attorney was close to then-mayor Henry W. Maier. Langley felt that this was influencing the office’s work.

The city attorney in Milwaukee is elected to four-year terms. Langley decided to run against his boss in the 1984 election. Langley’s campaign centered on a theme: “I wanted to eliminate the politics from our legal work.” He won with 56 percent of the vote, even as Maier was winning his seventh term in office.

Now it is Langley, in his eighth term, who is the veteran officeholder. His record of accomplishments, large and small, earned Langley the Jefferson B. Fordham Award for Lifetime Achievement, given annually by the American Bar Association Section for State and Government Law and presented in Chicago this past July.

If “no politics” was Langley’s first theme as city attorney, his second has been to furnish “the best legal services we could provide,” not only to the city government but to the Milwaukee Public Schools and the city pension fund, both of which are also represented by the city attorney’s office. To be praised as a fine attorney is a major compliment from Langley, and he says that often about members of his staff.

Langley has led Milwaukee through quite a few major legal matters during his tenure, with some high-impact successes. To name several:

- In 1999, the city reached a “global pension settlement” with unions, retirees, and other parties, resolving many years of litigation. The settlement gave immediate increased benefits to retirees, and long-term stability to the pension fund, which Langley called “the best-funded pension fund in the country.” He calls the agreement his most significant accomplishment.
- He oversaw the resolution of a massive number of claims against Milwaukee after cryptosporidium, a parasite that caused hundreds of thousands of illnesses, contaminated the city’s water supply in 1993.
- Langley helped end the longstanding “sewer wars” among many local governments, state agencies, and others over pollution, particularly of Lake Michigan, caused by sewage overflows.
- This year, Langley is working for the second time on the complex agreements to build a new basketball arena in downtown Milwaukee. He represented the city in work related to the Bradley Center’s construction in the late 1980s.

At 70, Langley has wrestled with whether to run again in 2016. If his wife, Gail, were alive, he is sure he would retire. Sadly, she died in 2009. And now? Langley likes to golf and fish; he reads a lot, and he is close with his two sons, both of whom live in the Milwaukee area. But he loves his work. It’s so much of his life—and the new national honor underscores how much he has accomplished.

To run again? It’s a tough decision. But it’s one he certainly won’t make with politics in mind.
Old-Fashioned Typing Sparks Success in Corporate Law

It wasn't that long ago when there was no such thing as a personal computer and typewriters were used to produce academic papers and the like. Some people turned their typing skill into paid work, producing clean documents for other people with less time or less skill with typing.

When Kathie Buono was an undergraduate at the University of Dayton in Ohio, she made money typing on weekends. She worked mostly for students at the university's law school.

“I had no vision of going to law school whatsoever,” Buono recalled. But she got to know the students and their papers, and she liked both the people and the subject matter.

“The rest is history,” she said. She enrolled at Marquette Law School, which, among its advantages, was near a lot of family for Buono, who spent most of her growing-up years in Racine, Wis.

Buono joined Quarles & Brady in Milwaukee after graduation in 1986, starting out as a litigator. But she decided she didn’t have the right personality for that— for one thing, there was too much gamesmanship, she said. For another, progress came too slowly. She likes getting things done. She switched to transactional law, with one of the firm’s leaders, the late Patrick Ryan, L’69, as her mentor.

She worked on private equity/venture capital and public company securities. That led to a strong relationship with the private equity arm of M&I bank, and then with Mason Wells, a firm created in a spinoff from M&I. Buono headed up the efforts of 20 to 25 lawyers and others working with Mason Wells. She said she valued the long-term relationships and liked the work itself, especially mergers and acquisitions.

After 28 years at Quarles & Brady, Buono was approached by Briggs & Stratton, a large Milwaukee-area manufacturing firm. The firm’s general counsel, Robert Heath, was planning to retire. The chance to do something different and reenergizing appealed to her, so Buono joined Briggs & Stratton in early 2015; she holds the titles of vice president, general counsel, and secretary of the corporation.

So how’s it going?

“Great. I love it,” Buono said. She left a place with good people and a good work culture, and she joined a place with good people and a good work culture, she said, and she has learned a great deal about the industry she is part of now.

Buono said that Marquette Law School’s emphasis on practical applications has served her well. A big reason for this is that Buono herself is a practical person. She said she’s not the kind of lawyer who loves the law as an intellectual pursuit. But getting things done well? She’s built her career on that, paired with her talent for building relationships.

As a practical person, Buono keeps track of what is going on around her. That is clear in her work. It’s even clear from a big interest outside of work. Her husband, John, loves baseball and plays amateur hardball at a level that includes national tournaments. Buono is not a passive fan—she keeps the team’s scorebook, logging everything that happens on the field.

Want to know what’s happening? Ask Kathie Buono. That’s true on a lot of fronts.

PROFILE: Jack Miller, L’78

Amazing Places, Amazing Adventures—and Some Legal Work, Too

Fortunately, Jack Miller found some time to be interviewed from his home in Alaska—but it had to fit in between his return from nine days of hiking in remote parts of the state’s Denali National Park and his departure for three days of climbing in the Chugach Mountains on Alaska’s southern coast. Right after the climbing trip? He was leaving for the red salmon fishing season in the western part of the state.

“I’ve dedicated my life to enjoying the wilderness in Alaska, and it’s really worked out well,” said Miller. It’s a life in which Miller and his wife lived for a few years more than 50 miles from the nearest road; in which he has watched migrating caribou herds so large that they took all day to pass his tent; in which he has had numerous close-up encounters with bears; in which wolves and eagles and, in short, the most breathtaking sights have been parts of many of the Millers’ days and parts of their many years.

Miller grew up in Milwaukee’s Bay View neighborhood. He starred on the Bay View High School football team; his wife, JoAnn, was captain of the cheerleaders. They got married after his second year in law school and took a summer trip across Canada, having to return to Milwaukee (and law school) before reaching the Alaskan border. “We decided if we were going to look for a job, we were going to look for one only in Alaska,” Miller said. Even before he finished law school, a firm in Anchorage offered him a position.

“I stopped being a lawyer after about 11 months,” Miller said. The couple moved to a remote spot in the vast Alaskan wilderness, where they homesteaded a property. They had a son and eventually decided to move back to Anchorage. But legal work still took a distant second to involvement with nature. In many years, he did little to no legal work. But he did spend time as a commercial fisherman and hunting guide and in several jobs with the Alaska Department of Fish and Game.

His legal work from the start has primarily involved energy companies. After the enormous Exxon Valdez oil spill in 1989, Miller became one of the lead attorneys for the main contractor working on the cleanup. He has continued to work on large commercial transactions for oil and gas companies, including work around the world.

These days, Miller’s wife, JoAnn, doesn’t go on his wilderness trips often, but, at 64, Miller remains immersed in Alaska, usually traveling solo. Alaska, he said, is “still an amazing, amazing place.” And to be alone in nature is “the most pure way to live in the moment. . . . It’s almost the exact opposite of being a lawyer.”

In addition to part-time work on commercial transactions, Miller does pro bono work at a clinic associated with a church in Anchorage. It’s a largely Hispanic congregation, with many people needing help with immigration matters and debt problems. He finds it rewarding; he said that 2015 will be the third year he works more pro bono hours than billable hours.

The Millers have two sons who live in the Anchorage area. “We’ll never be rich, we’ll never have a big house, but none of that matters to me,” Miller said. “I can’t tell you what an amazing life I’ve had, what a privileged existence I’ve had.”
