

Other Football Leagues

League: New Arena Football League (AFL)

LEAGUE UPDATE: The Arena Football League is back for the 2010 season. Following the bankruptcy of the original Arena Football League and its minor league (AF2); a new group of investors composed of old AFL and AF2 owners purchased all of the assets of the former league from the AFL's bankruptcy estate. The group - called Arena Football One - purchased all the assets for $6.1 million. After purchasing the assets of the former league, Arena Football One rebranded itself as the new Arena Football League (AFL). The new AFL started play in April of 2010 with 15 teams. The teams are a mix of former AFL, AF2, and expansion teams.

The newly formed league will operate as a single entity, much like Major League Soccer (MLS). All players and personnel will be employees of the new AFL. This structure was set up to help control operating costs and overhead for the league. The new league's operating budget will be greater than the former AF2 and less than the operating budget of the former AFL. Players in the new league will earn $400 per game.

The new league agreed to a television deal with the NFL network. Every Friday night during the season, the NFL network will air an AFL game of the week. Also, the new AFL has signed an agreement with Shamrock Sports to be a sales representative for all league sponsorship agreements. Shamrock Sports will be tasked with the sale of media advertising and sponsorship agreements for the league.

In 2011, the league will add three additional teams. The three teams will be the Kansas City Brigade, Philadelphia Soul, and the San Jose Sabercats. All three teams were part of the former AFL.

Principal Owner: UFL

Team Website

Stadium: Citrus Bowl

Date Built: 1936

Facility Website

UPDATE: The Florida Tuskers will play all of their 2010 games at the Citrus Bowl in Orlando. The decision was made after Sunburst Entertainment exercised its out-option to sell its minority share in the team back to the UFL. Currently, Sunburst is suing the UFL to collect $300,000 that is still owed to it by the league for the share of the team Sunburst sold back to the UFL. The UFL has paid Sunburst $364,000 of the $664,000 it owes Sunburst.

Last season, the Tuskers took a 6-0 record in the UFL championship game before losing to the league champion Las Vegas Locomotive.
